Reading in the local news media it appears that changes are proposed for evidence in domestic relations disputes.

Myself am great-grandfather, a citizen of Michigan.

May I popose that rules of evidence be not be changed. It appears the strident females who support this change do not do so recognizing the totallity of such cases but a narrow selfish self-serving view.

If there is change, may I propose that it be changed to give greater emphasis to contribution of women in any case. For thousands of years it has been recognized that there is nothing sharper than a womans tongue. It is no different today.

Sincerely,

Arnie A. Kelm
